THEIR PATH TO MILB

Baseball players come from far and wide, and their paths are not always identical. Whether playing at a four-year college, a junior college, high school, prep school, or an international team, there are many roads that have led this year's GreenJackets to where they are now.

For many who grow up in the United States, playing in college is the common pathway to getting drafted. Landon Harper (Southern Missouri), Jason Franks (Cal Poly), and Andrew Keck (Southeast Missouri State) all played in college, and both were selected in the 2022 MLB Draft. Other players were selected out of high school, like Mahki Backstrom and Tyler Collins. Backstrom was initially committed to play at Fresno State, and Collins an Oklahoma State University commit, but both elected to sign and pursue their professional career.

But for those who go undrafted, there are still paths to SRP Park. Catcher Nick Clarno, who started his college career at the University of North Georgia and later played at Lenoir-Rhyne, signed as an undrafted free agent, and has been one of the best catchers in the Carolina League through the first month of games. Similarly, Augusta native and Grovetown High School product Hayden Harris pitched five years at Georgia Southern, and after signing with the Braves was assigned to his hometown team.

#50 CEDRIC DE GRANDPRE

When people say “the world’s game,” they are often referring to soccer. However, this year’s GreenJackets roster shows that baseball, too, is an international affair.

The GreenJackets’ opening day roster featured three Canadians - Adam Shoemaker, David McCabe, and Cedric De Grandpré. Shoemaker was drafted out of a prep school in Canada, while De Grandpré was selected out of powerhouse junior college Chipola in Florida. Like many Americans, De Grandpré had previously committed to play in college at Arizona State, but elected to sign. McCabe, meanwhile, went the four-year college path, and played for three seasons at Charlotte before being picked last year.

For players who grew up in Central and South America, the draft process is different. Rather than being selected in a draft, teams are allocated a certain amount of funds to sign international players. Many of the talents on this GreenJackets’ roster, including Ambioris Tavarez, Didier Fuentes, and Jhancarlos Lara, were acquired by the Braves as International Free Agents.

All told, the GreenJackets boast players from the United States, Canada, the Dominican Republic, Columbia, and Venezuela, including 13 different states. Baseball brings players together, no matter what the path.
