JACKIE ROBINSON

Baseball was forever changed in part due to an otherwise insignificant contest that in other circumstances would likely be lost to history: a spring training exhibition matchup between the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Montreal Royals, their Triple-A affiliate, which took place March 17, 1946 at City Island Ballpark in Daytona Beach.

What was different, though, was that the Royals lineup featured 27-year-old rookie Jack Roosevelt "Jackie" Robinson, who was attempting to become the first black man to play professional baseball alongside whites in the 20th century. Because of that fact, Jacksonville and Sanford had already cancelled exhibition games involving Montreal because local laws banned blacks and whites from competing on the same field.

However, Daytona Beach offered to host the Royals and despite the game taking place deep in the Jim Crow south, by all accounts Robinson's debut was a success. Over 4,000 fans crammed City Island Ballpark that day—about a quarter of whom were black. Jackie himself recalled hearing even some of the white fans in attendance applauding him as he came up to the plate. No obvious racial issues were reported either.

While Robinson was 0-for-3 in the game, he did reach on a fielder's choice, stole a base, and scored a run. That spring, he performed well enough to make Montreal's Opening Day roster, paving the way for a season where he led the International League in batting average (.349) and led Montreal to the IL pennant.

A little over one year later, on April 15, 1947, Robinson integrated Major League Baseball when he made his debut for the Brooklyn Dodgers. Robinson played ten years for the Dodgers, earning the first Rookie of the Year award in 1947 and National League Most Valuable Player in 1949, becoming the first black player to earn induction into the National Baseball Hall of Fame in 1962.

In Daytona, City Island Ballpark was renamed Jackie Robinson Ballpark in 1990, and in the ensuing years, an interactive outdoor museum dedicated to Robinson opened alongside the third base riverwalk. A statue of Robinson and two young fans sits outside the front gates of "The Jack" to greet fans on their way in to cheer on the Tortugas.

Largely due to Robinson's impact, Jackie Robinson Ballpark was designated as a National Commemorative Site in early 2025, with future recognition as a National Historic Landmark also under consideration.
