FULL CIRCLE FOR MYLES SCHRODER

BY RYLAN KOBRE

The last time Myles Schroder wore a GreenJackets uniform, he did it as a player in the San Francisco Giants organization in 2012.

When he does it in 2021, he'll wear the jersey as a coach in the Atlanta Braves organization.

That 2012 season was memorable for a lot of reasons - both for the good and the bad. Schroder met his wife during that season and the two have lived in Grovetown for nearly three years now.

But that year was also a challenging one. His best friend from high school, Buddy Ferguson, passed away. So when Schroder was given the opportunity to coach with the Braves, it had an even bigger impact.

"Being with the Braves, and being in the south, it's a dream," Schroder said. "My buddy I grew up with, pretty much my best friend, but my brother really, he was a die-hard Braves fan growing up. He passed away when I was playing in Augusta."

Ferguson was a pitcher when Schroder played with him in high school, and he always loved the great Braves teams loaded with pitching. The first day Schroder showed up for Braves camp this spring, he was given number 16. Ferguson's number in high school.

"It was a nice text message to send to his parents," Schroder said.

Now Schroder is getting ready to coach the youngest Braves, and he's been telling them all about some of his favorite atmospheres from back when he was a player in Augusta.

"I was actually telling people about it today. Military night is pretty cool where they fill the stadium with all the military people and they do their chants," Schroder said.

It has all come full circle for the former player who appeared in 653 games over eight seasons in the minors.

"It's kind of crazy how all that came along," Schroder said. "Now I'm coaching with the Braves and living in the south. You can't ask for anything better than putting that 'A' on your chest."

GETTING CLOSE TO THE SHOW

These former GreenJackets are knocking on the door of the big leagues. Here's a few who have either made their debut, or are getting close.

It's hard to forget the brash 18-year-old who played in the inaugural season at SRP Park in 2018. In fact, he was so memorable, many GreenJackets fans have his bobblehead sitting at home.

The #3 overall prospect in the San Francisco Giants system, according to MLB.com, Ramos has a very strong chance to make his major league debut in 2021. This spring, he took home the Barry Nugent award - a award voted on by his teammates, coaches and training staff and is given to a player in his first big league camp that performs the best.

Ramos slashed .410/.425/.718 and hit three home runs this spring and many evaluators believe he's close to roaming around the outfield grass at AT&T Park.

HELIOT RAMOS

CAMILO DOVAL

The flame throwing closer made his major league debut on April 18 against the Miami Marlins, and he worked a three-up, three-down inning while striking out two. Doval showed off his 97-mph fastball along the way.

In 2018, Doval appeared in 44 games for the Jackets and collected 78 strikeouts in only 53 innings. He also snagged 11 saves.

Expect Doval to control the 7th and 8th innings for the Giants, and maybe he'll grab a save or two when Giants closer Jake McGee needs some rest.

When Sean Hjelle steps on the diamond in a Major League game, he will be the tallest pitcher in the history of baseball. In 2019, he may have been the tallest man in all of the CSRA (not confirmed).

Hjelle stands at 6'11", but has a repeatable motion that could make him an important starting pitcher someday for the Giants. He appeared in 9 starts for the Jackets, and owned a 2.66 ERA before his promotion two months into the season in 2019.

SEAN HJELLE

His fastball sits from 92-94 and he flashes a knuckle-curveball. Hjelle could make his debut in late 2021, or early in 2022.
