HEALTHY SINNARD SHOWING OFF IN PRO DEBUT

BY NOAH ADCOCK-HOWETH

After nearly two years removed from throwing competitive pitches, right-hander Luke Sinnard has been downright dominant in his first professional season, placing himself on the precipice of a promotion to Rome.

Sinnard's ascendance began in spring of 2023, his first year at Indiana University after a freshman campaign with the Western Kentucky Hilltoppers. Sinnard parlayed a strong first fall into a role in the rotation, and immediately rewarded the Hoosiers' faith in him with one of the strongest seasons by an underclassman in the Big 10 that year. The Tennessee native went 6-3 across 16 starts, posting an ERA just a tick above four and striking out a whopping 114 hitters, breaking a school record that had stood for 89 years (Whitey Wilshire, 1934).

While the regular season brought nothing but promise, disaster struck in the playoffs, as Sinnard's Hoosiers found themselves in the Lexington Regional against West Virginia. Sinnard drew the starting nod, but just two innings in, felt a twinge in his arm that would cut his day short and end his season.

Sinnard was diagnosed with a torn ulnar collateral ligament in his throwing elbow, and underwent Tommy John surgery that summer. An increasingly common procedure with a lengthy recovery time, the diagnosis and subsequent surgery cost Luke the entirety of his junior season, as he did not throw a pitch for Indiana in 2024.

Despite a lack of in-game innings last spring, Sinnard did get healthy enough to throw bullpens for a handful of scouts, and the Braves liked what they saw (not to mention all he had done as a sophomore) enough to draft the big righty with the 99th overall pick of the 2024 MLB Draft.

In a move not uncommon with newly drafted pitchers, the Braves opted not to send Sinnard to an affiliate to begin the year, instead bringing him to the team's complex in Florida to continue strengthening his arm. Over the offseason, Sinnard underwent a second elbow procedure, having ulnar nerve relocation surgery to minimize the chance of pain or reaggravation in 2025.

Placed on Augusta's roster for Opening Day, Sinnard arrived to town with lots of intrigue, and was immediately recognizable by way of his hulking 6'8, 250 lb frame. He debuted on the road in Hickory with mixed results, but after that introductory outing, has been nearly unstoppable for the 'Jackets.

In seven starts and just shy of 30 innings, Luke Sinnard has allowed just three earned runs while striking out 41 hitters in that time. He has gone five innings or more three times, and held hitters at bay with a strong riding fastball, sharp biting slider, and deadly splitter that continues to improve with each outing. His defining moment came in a mid-May start in Columbia, where he completely neutralized the first-place Fireflies through six scoreless innings with a career-high nine strikeouts.

At the time of publication, Sinnard was a consensus top-30 prospect in the Braves' organization across all noteworthy publications. His strong start was not unnoticed either, as more and more national writers and scouts alike turned their attention to Augusta to keep a watchful eye on his improvements. With command improving start after start, and Sinnard now showing he is built up enough to go deep in games, it feels as though it's only a matter of time until he's testing his luck with the Rome Emperors.

It was a long, arduous path back onto the mound, but Luke Sinnard has proven that the wait was worth it as his first professional season continues to unfold in showstopping fashion.
