MAKING THE JUMP

BY MITCHELL SPELTZ

The last two years have produced challenges for GreenJackets Pitching Coach, Mike Steed. Steed was set to take over the managerial duties for the Thunder Bay Border Cats of the Northwoods League, but the COVID-19 pandemic changed those plans. While COVID kept most baseball teams off the field in the summer of 2020, it happened to Steed and the Border Cats again in 2021 as the lone, Canadian franchise in the NWL lost their season while the rest of the league took the diamond. "There's so much that goes into putting a roster together and then to get that news there won't be a season was tough."

Not being able to manage in one of the top summer, collegiate leagues was difficult for Steed considering all the hard work put into building not just one but two rosters. "There's a lot of relationships you build with college coaches and players during the process and when you have to deliver the bad news about not being able to play it hurts, especially to the players." Although his players didn't get to play in Thunder Bay, they did get the opportunity to play elsewhere in the NWL in 2021 as they were sent to the other 21 teams across the league. As happy as he was to see them play last summer, it hit him differently watching them play well somewhere else. "That may have been the toughest part watching their success in another uniform and not in front of Thunder Bay fans."

After two straight summers of not being able to coach summer ball, exhaustion started to set in for Steed considering all the time and effort put in for teams that never got the chance to showcase their talent. That's when people he knew in professional baseball reached out to him asking if he was ready to make the jump to the next level. After years of contemplating, Steed decided he was ready to pursue those opportunities.

Steed has been regarded as a highly respected baseball coach in Canada due to his work with the Ontario Blue Jays, one of the top amateur programs in the country. He's worked with many players who have gone on to play baseball at the next level including most recently Zach Pop who just made his major league debut last season with the Miami Marlins. His strong track record of developing young players and extensive time around the game made him an ideal candidate as a minor league coach.

His pursuit and connections led him to the Atlanta Braves organization where they had an opening as a pitching coach, just what he specializes in. "I could not be more thankful to work for the Braves organization," said Steed. "It's going to be a great fit in Augusta, I've heard a lot of great things about the organization, the city, and the ballpark, and I'm excited to go to work."
