GREENJACKETS HIGHLIGHT

Most of the GreenJackets' starting lineup may not be old enough to legally drink, but the bevy of young hitters that lead Augusta's offense have been more than up to the task of facing professional pitching to start the 2025 season.

At the time of writing, the GreenJackets sit at 11-7, winners of five straight games for the first time since August of 2023. While the pitching has been as strong as expected in Atlanta's arm-heavy system, it's been the bats that have taken the biggest step forward from last season to now.

More nights than not, the top five hitters in Augusta's order are 19 or younger, and three of the five hitters are in their first season of pro baseball. The outfield trio of Owen Carey, Isaiah Drake, and Eric Hartman have set the tone, with catcher Nick Montgomery and shortstop John Gil also finding plenty of ways to contribute.

Drake and Gil each spent time with the GreenJackets last year, and both experienced growing pains as they attempted to navigate the Carolina League at 18 years of age. Both players showed off prolific speed and defense, but left room for improvement at the dish.

Flash forward to 2025, and both players have taken key steps forward in the development process. Gil's quick hands have led to an uptick in hard-hit balls, and a small swing adjustment has put fewer balls in the air, and allowed him to use his speed to beat out base hits. Drake, who entered the year receiving rave reviews for his spring training performance, has continued that momentum, consistently finding his way on base and greatly improving his bat control against left-handed pitching.

Montgomery began his first pro season with some fanfare, as the 5th rounder was the highest drafted position player in Atlanta's 2024 class, and the only non-pitcher picked in the first 10 rounds. Lauded for the raw power found in his 6'4 frame, Montgomery has already begun to translate that strength into games, as he clubbed two homers in his first 10 appearance with the GreenJackets. He has already improved his plate discipline in a very short time, and continues to develop as his chances increase.

Neither Carey nor Hartman was trumpeted as a franchise savior, but both have turned fans' heads and left scouts scratching theirs, wondering how two toolsy outfielders fell to the 15th and 20th rounds, respectively. Hartman had a huge Opening Weekend that included a walk-off three-run homer in extras, and has also shown good baserunning acumen. The Alberta native can play both outfield and second base, consistently finding his way into the lineup.

Carey was a late riser out of New Hampshire in the 2024 high school class, and has seemingly done everything right since turning pro. The lefty has flashed plus plate discipline, a strong hit tool, and the recent ability to mash extra base hits on command.

Beyond the physical tools, the makeup of this group of young players has surpassed expectation. The level of competitiveness and cohesiveness found across the roster was unheard of this time last year, and has already shown itself in a handful of late-game situations. Credit is due to skipper Wynston Sawyer as well, as the second-year manager has begun to build a connected winning culture in a league that often feels focused solely on development.

Much will continue to be made about the pitching staff, and deservedly so. Atlanta's farm system has long been known for plus pitching development, and the GreenJackets have plenty of arms to be excited about. But this young nucleus of position players, growing together and improving seemingly day after day, give an added level of excitement on the offensive side of the ball that feels unlike much seen at SRP Park in recent memory.
