GREENJACKETS HIGHLIGHT

SEARS, SAMUELS EARN EARLY PROMOTION TO ROME

In a season where GreenJacket pitching has stood out, two arms have separated themselves early, and been rewarded with promotions to the next level of Minor League Baseball.

Through the season's first 32 games, no team in the Carolina League has a better ERA than Augusta, sitting at 3.42 across the pitching staff. While every arm has contributed in some way, Brett Sears and Logan Samuels, both of whom are in their first full professional seasons, took the league by storm in its first month to earn the call to Rome.

For Sears, success is far from a new endeavor. The former Nebraska Cornhusker was the 2024 Big Ten Pitcher of the Year before being drafted by the Braves in the 7th Round of the 2024 MLB Draft. Sears did not throw after signing, but began this season with the 'Jackets and was immediately up to the task.

In Sears' first month as a pro, he bounced between the rotation and bullpen, throwing multiple innings in every outing. Regardless of role, Sears dominated, boasting a 1.93 ERA in 18.2 innings with a pair of wins on his ledger. The Iowa native tacked on an astonishing 31 strikeouts, striking out nearly 15 batters per nine innings. He was called up to Rome on May 6th, and allowed just one run in eleven innings across his first two starts.

Samuels may not have come into pro ball with as lengthy a track record as Sears, but found nearly the same amount of success in 2025 in a similar role. An Alabama native and lifelong Braves fan, Samuels made history when he was drafted in the 8th Round last year as the highest drafted player in history from the University of Montevallo.

Samuels made a very brief one-inning debut in 2024 to get his feet wet, but truly tested the waters of pro ball in 2025 with the GreenJackets. Samuels began the year with a bang, starting his season with five scoreless innings against the Fireflies on Opening Weekend at SRP Park. All told, Samuels was second on the team in innings through May 13th, the date of his push up to Rome.

During his time with Augusta, Samuels struck out a batter per inning in 23 frames and held opponents to a .202 batting average. He also held opponents to less than a baserunner per inning, and was especially impressive in April, when he allowed just two runs in four total appearances.

Sears and Samuels joined Riley Frey as the first pitchers with multiple appearances for the 2025 'Jackets to head across the Georgia line to join the Emperors. While Frey started the year in Rome, dominated in two Augusta starts, and was quickly recalled, the two rookie right handers were both on the Opening Day roster before pitching their way to a promotion. If history is any indicator, not to mention the high level of success seen across the GreenJackets' pitching staff, one would have to think that Logan Samuels and Brett Sears will be far from the last Augusta arms to head to the next rung on the Braves' ladder.
