TAKING A LOOK AT THE BRAVES' 2024 DRAFT

Recent seasons have seen some shake ups at the top of the Atlanta Braves' front office, but one thing remains consistent: few teams love to draft and develop pitching like the Braves. Atlanta's top prospect lists are teeming with homegrown arms, and there's going to be plenty more after this year's draft just a couple weeks ago. 11 of the 20 players drafted to Augusta's parent club were pitchers, including 9 of the first 10. As the signing process finalizes and these players begin to make their way to North Augusta, the development process will truly begin.

The crown jewel of the class, at least on paper, is first round pick Cam Caminiti. The 17-year-old lefty out of Saguaro High School in Arizona, and young cousin of MLB All Star Ken Caminiti, was not expected to be still on the board at pick #24 when Atlanta first selected. Caminiti had little connection to the Braves as a result, but his slippage down the first round led to a massive gain for the Braves. Many reporters and scouts had Caminiti as the best high-school arm in the draft, despite his youth, he immediately provides a high-ceiling arm at the lower end of the system.

The second selection of Day 1, and nearly the entirety of Day 2, continued to be shots at the dartboard to find the next Atlanta ace. Second round pick Carter Holton comes from Vanderbilt with SEC pedigree, and provides another intriguing left-handed arm. Other pitchers to watch from the 2nd day include Indiana RHP Luke Sinnard, who has immense talent but is coming off of Tommy John Surgery, Nebraska RHP Brett Sears, who was the 2024 Big 10 Pitcher of the Year, and Collinsville HS (IL) RHP Ethan Bagwell, whose rawness is matched only by his potential. The one position player between rounds 1 and 10 was prep catcher Nick Montgomery, who already has a plus bat and could provide positional versatility as he grows.

General Manager Alex Anthopoulos utilized day 3 (rounds 11-20) to shore up depth in the field, especially in the outfield, which held 6 of the day's 10 selections. St. Louis University's Patrick Clohisy started the day by adding speed and patience to the organization, and could be a boon to the GreenJacket outfield should he find himself at SRP Park. Some other notable hitters from the latter rounds include shortstop Colby Jones from Northwest Florida State, first baseman Mason Guerra out of Oregon State, and Southern Mississippi outfielder Dalton McIntyre.

As fans have seen in previous years, a number of draft picks will make their organizational debut here in Augusta, and those that will do so this year should be touching down any day. Others will incite more patience, and could show face in the early parts of 2025. Regardless of when they make their debut, a strong majority of these players have the potential to make waves in the Carolina League and be a huge boon to the Augusta GreenJackets.
