DAWSON'S JOURNEY

Dawson Dimon joined the Braves organization midway through the 2022 season. He spent time in Gwinnett and Rome, helping out when needed behind the plate. But his journey to being a professional catcher begins, in his words, as soon as he could hold a baseball.

“Some guys like to play lots of positions, but I always knew I would be a catcher. I started playing when I was four, and I’ve been a catcher ever since,” Dimon says, and he has the picture to prove it. Pictured above is an elementary-aged Dimon, playing Little League baseball in his hometown of Lancaster, California. Dimon stuck with the catcher position, excelling at every age group he played with, before committing to play Division I baseball at San Diego State. “I wasn’t from an area that got a lot of scouts or had a lot of attention,” said Dimon of his experiences playing as a kid. “It was a lot of fun, being able to get recruited like that and visiting different places,” mentioned Dimon, “but I always knew that if I had the chance to go pro, I wanted to take it.”

And fortunately for him, he would get that chance, when the Tampa Bay Rays drafted him in the 34th round of the 2018 draft out of Quartz Hill High School. He knew that signing was his path. Dimon was able to have the experience of playing in the now-defunct Appalachian League, which in his words was “a chance to see different areas and cultures.”

Dimon is, if nothing else, observant. “I like to take things in,” he says. On this year’s GreenJackets opening day roster, Dimon is one of the older players, as is traditional of catchers. His passion for observing and taking things in helps him when working with often younger arms. He came up to me and talked for the better part of ten minutes about how he talks through game plans with more inexperienced pitchers, how he picks up on the path of different pitches as both catcher and hitter, and how he keeps his battery-mates calm.

Dimon is also a rarity at this level - someone who experienced a trade, when he came over into the Braves organization last June. His experience across multiple levels of baseball is valuable, and he’s not shy about using his experience, either. “The game has changed since I started playing, but I don’t mind it,” says Dimon with a smile. The bigger bases and the faster at-bats have proved challenging for some, but Dimon is a pragmatist. “We have pretty long days, and a lot of long days back to back. The new rules might create some challenges, force catchers to get better, force pitchers to get better, but I’m a fan of most everything that has changed,” says the Californian.

At 23 years old, Dimon will be catching a variety of pitchers this year, from the 17-year old Didier Fuentes to the 24-year old Rob Griswold. But by virtue of his experience, patience, and above all his willingness to help, they all feel at home with him behind the dish. After all, when Dimon turns 24 on May 17th, he will have spent two full decades as a catcher. It’s no surprise that he has established a home behind home plate.
