FORMER JACKETS RITCHIE, HARRIS SHINE IN FUTURES GAME

On the same mound they hope to one day call home, former GreenJackets JR Ritchie and Hayden Harris gave the Truist Park crowd reason for optimism as they each fared strongly in their turns in the spotlight during MLB's 2025 Futures Game.

Held annually since 1999 as part of Major League Baseball's All-Star festivities, the Futures Game gives fans of all 30 teams a glimpse into the young talent bubbling under the surface of their favorite club's roster, as well as the future of rival organizations on a single field. Since 2019, the event has mirrored the All-Star Game itself with an American League vs National League format, replacing the US vs World tradition the game was founded on.

This year, Atlanta's representatives were faced with an additional responsibility: serving as the faces of the host team itself, with the Braves hosting the All-Star Game and its plethora of complementary events for the first time since 2000. Atlanta elected to send Ritchie, one of the organization's most highly touted pitchers who is rapidly approaching the big-league roster, and Harris, an Augusta native who has grinded his way from going undrafted out of Georgia Southern to starring in the bullpen for the AAA Gwinnett Stripers.

JR Ritchie

Hayden Harris

Ritchie was given an immediate honor, being named the starting pitcher for the National League side and toeing the rubber right off the bat. A top draft pick in 2022 who had only returned to the mound one year ago after missing significant time due to Tommy John Surgery, Ritchie's resurgent 2025 had put him in a nationally televised spot against the American League's top hitters.

Despite a leadoff walk to Detroit's Max Clark, Ritchie would spin a hitless first inning that showed off why so many evaluators have been high on him for so long. Ritchie rebounded after the free pass to punch out the White Sox's Braden Montgomery, and after a week ground ball from Cleveland's CJ Kayfus, the righty got Boston's Jhostynxon Garcia to chase a sweeper off the plate for his second strikeout of the inning.

In an effort to ensure as many players were highlighted as possible, Ritchie threw just the one inning, content with both his effort and the show he put on. Harris would not emerge until the top of the 6th, and did so mid-inning, with two outs and no one on base. Harris would retire the only hitter he faced, striking out Josue Briceno of the Tigers' organization on his patented high fastball to continue what has been a dream 2025 for the 26-year-old lefty.

With the game long-since concluded (a 4-2 victory for the National League, their 5th in 6 tries), Harris was promptly returned to Gwinnett, where he continues to knock on the door of the Majors with an ERA of less than one. Ritchie had been in AA Columbus prior to the Futures Game, but with his track record of success this year, he was pushed to Gwinnett as well, and now is just one rung away from joining the Braves' rotation.

The entirety of All Star Week was an opportunity to show off Atlanta's stadium, hospitality, and organization to baseball as a whole, and the home team's two representatives for the Futures Game did not disappoint. With the partnership between the Braves and GreenJackets now well into its 5th season, more and more of the top young stars in the organization are current or former GreenJackets, Ritchie and Harris included. While there's no way to know what the future holds, the pair's performance in primetime further strengthens the likelihood that they will become the latest in a rapidly growing line of past Jackets to get the call to the Major Leagues.
