It was Easter Sunday at Great American Ball Park and the Reds were playing against the Chicago _____ (plural noun) _____. It was warm and the sun was shining on a great day for baseball. As the Reds took the field, the sellout crowd of _____ (number) _____ fans cheered from their seats. Luis Castillo prepared to throw the game's first pitch when suddenly six _____ (adjective) _____ bunnies hopped onto the field! All the Reds players raced around the field trying to catch the bunnies, but they were too fast.

Then Reds manager David Bell said, "Look, they each have an empty basket in their mouth. I think Chicago's mascot, Mr. _____ (plural noun) _____ took their eggs and hid them around the ballpark. We have to find them or the bunnies will stay and we'll never get to play the game!"

The players began searching the ballpark. Eugenio Suárez first checked the Fan Zone and spotted an egg at the carnival game called Gapper's _____ (verb) _____ the _____ (noun) _____. Nick Senzel explored the Riverboat Deck and noticed an egg on top of the Power Stacks. It was just out of reach, so he had to use a _____ (noun) _____ to get it down. Nick Castellanos and Mike Moustakas are new to the ballpark, so they stayed on the playing field. But they found a third egg over by the Reds dugout. "That egg is huge," Moustakas said. "It looks like it belongs to a _____ (animal) _____."

Sonny Gray checked Crosley Terrace where he spotted another egg in the grass over by the statues of Reds legends Ted Kluszewski and _____ (proper noun) _____. Jesse Winker was getting thirsty while looking for the eggs and stopped for a slushie. As he ordered a _____ (food) _____ slushie, his favorite kind, he saw an egg floating in the blue raspberry machine. "_____ (create your own nonsense word) _____, I found one!" he exclaimed.

But the sixth egg still could not be found. Trevor Bauer suggested they look in the _____ (place) _____ but Tucker Barnhart had already checked and there was no egg. Just as the players thought the game would have to be canceled, Joey Votto looked up in the stands and saw _____ (your name) _____ holding the final egg. "Way to go, you found the egg! As a reward, let's go to the concession stand and I will buy you all the _____ (plural noun) _____ you want!"

With the bunnies each getting their egg back, they went happily on their way and the game began. All the fans watched and cheered as the Reds won. It was a _____ (adjective) _____ Easter in Cincinnati!
